SUBJECT: Access Acquisition

Dear fellow employees,

Today, Williams is larger, stronger and more competitive than it was this time yesterday. By closing the acquisition of the remaining general partner interest in Access Midstream, we've taken a major step toward realizing our vision of becoming North America's premier energy infrastructure provider.

A growing, vibrant business composed of highly capable, talented employees, Access Midstream complements Williams' other businesses by expanding our footprint into regions such as the Mid-Continent, Permian, Haynesville and Barnett supply areas, and bolstering our presence in the Marcellus, Utica and Rockies. As I've noted before, Access Midstream enjoys an excellent reputation for project execution and high-performing operations, which we believe will contribute to the strategic goals we're pursuing throughout Williams.

The closing yesterday concluded step one of the two-step process we announced on June 15. Next, we expect to move toward a possible merger of Access Midstream and Williams Partners, which would create one unified master limited partnership under Williams. We will keep you informed on our progress toward that merger, if it occurs, over the next few months.

In the meantime, I have asked Mike Stice of Access and Robyn Ewing to lead an integrated and structured transition process. Mike and Robyn will lead this thorough, coordinated effort with participation of key individuals from Access and Williams to develop a comprehensive plan to bring the organizations together.

During the transition period, there will be a degree of uncertainty as we work to define and solidify a new organization. Whether or not the merger occurs, we expect minimal change for most employees. While it's only natural to be somewhat anxious, I encourage you to continue doing great work, operating safely and focusing on the big picture—a supercharged company with even greater opportunity than before.

Regardless of step two, Access Midstream is now officially part of Williams. When you have the opportunity, I hope you'll join me in welcoming our new colleagues from Access Midstream. At the same time, I ask that you be patient and respect the transition process that Mike and Robyn will lead, and participate in the effort if asked to do so. I'm confident that, together, we can write a prosperous new chapter to our company's long, illustrious history.

Dear Access Midstream employees,

Today, Williams is larger, stronger and more competitive than it was this time yesterday because of the great business you have helped build.

By closing the acquisition of the remaining general partner interest in Access, we've taken a major step toward realizing Williams' vision of becoming North America's premier energy infrastructure provider.

As a growing, vibrant business composed of highly capable, talented employees, Access complements Williams' other businesses by expanding our footprint into regions such as the Mid-Continent, Permian, Haynesville and Barnett supply areas, and bolstering our presence in the Marcellus, Utica and Rockies. I'm confident your excellence in project execution and high-performing operations will contribute significantly to the strategic goals we're pursuing.

The closing yesterday concluded step one of the two-step process we announced on June 15. Next, we expect to move toward a possible merger of Access and Williams Partners, which would create one unified master limited partnership under Williams. We will keep you informed on our progress toward that merger, if it occurs, over the next few months.

In the meantime, I have asked Mike Stice and Robyn Ewing of Williams to lead an integrated and structured transition process. Mike and Robyn will lead this thorough, coordinated effort with participation of key individuals from Access and Williams to develop a comprehensive plan to bring the organizations together.

During the transition period, there will be a degree of uncertainty as we work to define and solidify a new organization. Whether or not the merger occurs, we expect minimal change for most employees. While it's only natural to be somewhat anxious, I encourage you to continue doing great work, operating safely and focusing on the big picture—a supercharged company with even greater opportunity than before.

Regardless of step two, Access is now officially part of Williams. On behalf of our board of directors and executive officers, I am honored to welcome Access to Williams' corporate family. As I shared with many of you in Oklahoma City a few days ago, I've grown to love Williams over the past 28 years and I believe you will, too. I'm confident that, together, we can write a prosperous new chapter to our company's long, illustrious history.

Q&A for Employees

What did Williams announce today?

Williams has closed the acquisition of Global Infrastructure Partners' interests in ACMP and ACMP GP, and now owns 100 percent of the general partner and approximately 50 percent of the limited partner interests in Access Midstream Partners, holding the controlling interest in Access—much as exists with Williams Partners.

Williams expects the acquisition to increase scale, enhance presence in key growth basins and fortify the fee-based revenues that support dividend-growth plans; increasing fee-based revenues to more than 80 percent of its gross margin as a result of the addition of Access' fee-based revenues.

Williams also reaffirmed its intent to move forward with the second major step, a proposal for Access and Williams Partners to merge into a single MLP that it expects to be one of the largest, fastest-growing master limited partnerships.

Why does Williams believe the proposed merger is a good thing?

This proposed transaction is expected to create one of the most substantial growth platforms in the industry, significantly broadening the customer base, enhancing the overall business platform and expanding the technical and operational expertise, and providing additional opportunities to sustain long-term growth.

Access complements Williams' commercial, financial and people strategies, and there are several expected operational, economic and people benefits from this proposed merger that are expected to deliver value for investors in Access, Williams Partners and Williams.

What are the next steps to accomplish the proposed merger?

The proposed merger terms will be subject to negotiation, review and approval by conflicts committees of each partnership's board of directors. The conflicts committees, comprised solely of independent board members, are expected to retain legal and financial advisors. Williams expects the proposed merger to be subject to approval by Williams Partners unitholders.

Are there immediate organizational changes in either organization with completion of the acquisition?

No immediate changes. There will be a thorough, coordinated effort with participation from across Access and Williams to evaluate both organizations and develop the integration plan to bring the two merged organizations together further.

The transition team will be led by Mike Stice representing Access and Robyn Ewing representing Williams.

What will the combined organization look like after the merger?

One of the truly compelling benefits of the proposed merger is the ability to incorporate the experience and expertise of Access' and Williams' talented employees.

It is premature to speculate on the exact structure of the organization following the proposed merger, as there are several activities necessary to be completed before that time. We remain committed to providing transparency throughout the process and updating you as soon as possible as information becomes available.

How will operational overlap between Williams and Access be addressed?

Minimal impact is anticipated for field organizations, as Access and Williams have complementary operations, and there is tremendous growth potential in basins where opportunities are shared.

Will Williams close Access' Oklahoma City office?

Williams intends to maintain a strong presence in Oklahoma City, much like its major offices in Houston, Pittsburgh, Salt Lake City, and Calgary. Such regional offices house operational and functional area employees. Access' OKC office will remain a regional office for Williams' unregulated gathering, compression, and processing business.

Do Access employees immediately become Williams employees?

No. The general partner of Access is now a wholly owned subsidiary of Williams. But its employees remain employed separately by Access, and will continue to participate in Access' stand-alone compensation and benefit programs, and will follow Access policies and procedures.

Williams management is working on a plan for integrating Williams and Access compensation and benefit programs. At some point in the future, it is expected that Access employees will become Williams employees, but it is premature to discuss those details.

Access employees have achieved great success at their company. We're excited by the opportunity to incorporate the experience and expertise of Access employees.

How will this affect Access employees' compensation and benefits?

This transaction doesn't immediately impact Access employees' reporting relationships or compensation and benefits programs. These will remain unchanged for Access employees through at least Dec. 31, 2014.

How do Williams' benefits compare with those of Access?

Our medical, retirement and other employee benefits programs are comprehensive and competitive within our industry. We expect Access employees to enjoy cost savings compared to their current benefits.

Do current employees of Williams remain Williams employees, assuming Williams Partners is merged into Access Midstream Partners?

The proposed merger of Access Midstream Partners and Williams Partners does not affect Williams' employees' status with Williams.

Who should I contact if I have additional questions?

If you have a question please contact your direct manager and/or your human resources business partner or manager. You may also send questions to WilliamsNews@Williams.com.

While every question may not be answered at this time, we are committed to understanding your questions and providing updates as soon as is reasonably possible.
