[Excerpts from intranet post]

There was a lot to talk about this quarter. We announced a new CEO and Executive Chairman, delivered the best financial results in company history, and delved further into plans to merge with T-Mobile.

It was a lot of information to squeeze into a two-hour Town Hall, but, luckily, we're going to recap it for you here.

T-Mobile merger will take time, but it's worth the wait

The best partnerships happen when both companies need each other to be successful, and that's why we're bringing Sprint and T-Mobile together. T-Mobile needs Sprint and Sprint needs T-Mobile—that's what will make this merger successful.

You might still be asking yourself, "Why now?"

Well, together, we will create jobs, drive down prices and deliver the best nationwide 5G network. The New T-Mobile will be able to do what our competitors can't, and revolutionize the wireless industry.

The deal was announced Sunday, but the work is far from over. We still need to get the deal approved by Washington and begin integrating with our new partners at T-Mobile. This is a long process that could take years to be fully complete. But once we've merged, and finally built the New T-Mobile, the potential synergies are huge.

For full details on our merger with T-Mobile, read the story. You can also check out the Sprint and T-Mobile Merger space on i-Connect.

Michel Combes transitions to CEO of Sprint, Marcelo to take on a new role Sprint CEO Marcelo Claure will be taking on the roles of Executive Chairman of Sprint, CEO of SoftBank Group International and COO of SoftBank Group Corp.

These new roles will mean a shift in focus for Marcelo, but he is not leaving Sprint. The transition allows him time to focus on securing regulatory approval in next nine to 18 months, while optimizing synergies across SoftBank companies. He will closely oversee Sprint's interests and bring amazing companies to the Sprint ecosystem.

Current Sprint CFO, Michel Combes, will take over for Marcelo as CEO of Sprint and run day-to-day business operations. Michel will focus on executing our winning plan, and continue to make Sprint a stronger force in the wireless industry.

You can find full details on our leadership changes on i-Connect.

Looking ahead

A lot has changed at Sprint, but our fiscal year 2018 strategy and goals have not. Although we're in the middle of a merger with T-Mobile, we have to continue to perform at a high level, with the intention of making Sprint the best wireless carrier in the nation.

We can't take our eye off the race to 5G, or the competitive nature of the industry.
