FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Steve Bostic Urges Career Education Corporation Management to Address
Unanswered Questions

Urges Fellow Stockholders to Vote the BLUE Proxy Card to Protect the Value of their Investment

SEA ISLAND, GA, May 17, 2006 -- Steve Bostic, the beneficial owner of approximately 1% of the outstanding stock of Career Education Corporation (CEC or NASDAQ: CECO), today issued the following letter to his fellow stockholders. The letter urges Career Education Corporation's management to address numerous unanswered questions and urges stockholders to vote for the alternative slate of directors, comprised of James Copeland, William Ide and himself, in order to ensure effective Board oversight, and restore integrity and sound educational values to the company:

Dear Fellow Stockholder,

Ever since American InterContinental University ("AIU") was placed on probation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools ("SACS") in December 2005, management of Career Education Corporation ("CEC") have maintained that they are working diligently to resolve AIU's accreditation troubles. Jack Larson has told stockholders that a third-party assessment addressing SACS' recommendations would be completed by March 2006.

Then how can it be that, as reported in The London Times on April 28, 2006, AIU London, a SACS accredited institution, became the only institution in history to fail a Quality Assurance Agency ("QAA") routine inspection? How can the Board explain the discrepancy between the measures they claim to be taking and results like AIU London's historic failed audit?

The bottom line is that AIU remains on probation, threatening its accreditation and jeopardizing CEC's principal asset. In light of this, stockholders must ask themselves whether Jack Larson and his Board will be able to regain the trust of SACS and save AIU's accreditation.

On February 8, 2006, I sent a letter to Jack Larson asking seven questions:

- (1) What changes do you plan to make in the oversight structure of CEC, and its constituent institutions, and in their operating practices, in order to correct past regulatory violations; assure regulatory compliance going forward; and instill and maintain an ethical corporate culture consistent with the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002?
- (2) What changes have you made or do you plan to make specifically in the areas of marketing, admissions and financial aid with respect to: (i) operating policies and practices; (ii) personnel working in those areas; (iii) reporting relationships; (iv) regulatory audits or reviews; and (v) disciplinary actions?

- (3) What are the specific steps that AIU is taking in its "comprehensive action plan", which was mentioned in CEC's January 17, 2006 press release, to meet the Commission on Colleges of SACS criteria in each of the core academic and operational areas that have been identified as being deficient?
- (4) What changes do you plan to make to CEC's administration of its private loan programs to curb the loss of loan repayment revenue and to improve the accuracy of the reporting of loan status and bad debt expense?
- (5) What changes do you plan to make to the systems and practices that CEC uses to capture data and prepare reports to regulatory bodies and the public on key educational measures, in order to ensure accuracy in CEC's reported enrollment, retention, graduation and placement statistics?
- (6) What changes do you plan to make in CEC's academic and operational practices, including student services, to improve student retention and graduation rates?
- (7) What changes do you plan to make in CEC's human resources management policies and practices to improve employee morale, provide faculty and employee training and development and to build loyalty and increase the retention of valuable employees?

Jack Larson publicly stated that CEC intended to address many of my questions during its February 15th earnings call. Yet despite this undertaking, and despite all of CEC's communications with its stockholders during the last several months, including not one but two earnings calls and hundreds of thousands of dollars of stockholders' money spent on a recent media blitz, Jack Larson and his Board have not specifically answered the questions that I posed over three months ago.

Moreover, regardless of what management may be telling stockholders about U.S. Department of Education ("DOE") Title IV financial aid issues, DOE restrictions against CEC expanding with new campuses are "substantially still in place today," as stated by a DOE spokeswoman in the Wall Street Journal on May 8, 2006.

Jack Larson and his Board have dismissed these serious threats to the health and value of CEC with the same spin that allowed Jack Larson to state "[w]e have received a great deal of positive feedback from investors about our operation performance, and there has been a clear expression of support for our current management and board of directors," just six days after CEC's stockholders cast what ISS called the "highest ever recorded" withhold vote against management's director nominees at CEC's 2005 Annual Meeting. Stockholders should be insulted by the fact that Jack Larson and his Board believe they are so gullible. However, from personally working with SACS for years, I can assure you that the regulators will not be fooled by meaningless rhetoric.

DO NOT PLAY RUSSIAN ROULETTE WITH THE VALUE OF YOUR INVESTMENT!

During my tenure as President of AIU, the university was fully accredited by SACS, and at no time did SACS take negative action against AIU as it has done in the past with AIU's former "warning" status and now with AIU's probation status, the most severe action short of revocation of membership - all of which occurred under the watch of Jack Larson and his Board. My past record of managing AIU's relationship with SACS demonstrates that I have the credibility and judgment that is needed to help guide CEC through a Board-initiated transformation effort that can resolve the problems identified by SACS and restore its trust in AIU.

James E. Copeland, Jr. is the former CEO of Deloitte & Touche LLP, and his extensive accounting experience would benefit the Company in light of recent restatements and deficiencies in internal controls.

R. William Ide is the former President of the American Bar Association and is a current member of the board of trustees of Clark-Atlanta University, a SACS accredited institution, which makes him well-placed to restore sound educational values at CEC.
