Marathon to Acquire Ashland's Interest in MAP

James O'Brien
Chairman and CEO, Ashland Inc.

Ashland has been more than thrilled with your performance. As we have talked to the various audiences whether they are own employees within Ashland about you or our constituents in Wall Street one thing we have been able to point toward is that you all have been top quartile performer. We don't expect that ever to change. And as we look forward this continuing effort that we have with you as a joint venture partner until the close of this transaction, we expect nothing less from you. I think it is inside your culture and inside you DNA about who and what you are.

Gary Heminger
President, Marathon Ashland Petroleum LLC

We were challenged over six and a half years ago almost to take the set of complementary assets. To take those assets, combine them, bring synergies together, bring efficiencies together, and to make them more valuable than the day we started. I am very proud of the work that the MAP employees have done. In fact, we have grown the value of these assets by nearly 50 percent since the start of MAP. So as I turn the presentation over to Clarence, I will guarantee you that the MAP employees will be totally focused on running these assets to the best of our ability and as we take this transaction on to closing and then on to a new company we look forward to the challenges ahead. We believe that we have developed a company that is known across the industry as a top quartile performer and we are Best in Class performer and a Best in Class refiner marketer. So Clarence I would like to turn the podium over to you.

Clarence Cazalot
President and CEO, Marathon Oil Corporation

I can't help but reflect as we meet here to just about four years when I first joined Marathon, within a couple of weeks of joining the company, that I went to my very first MAP board of managers meeting at the Garyville refinery. And I had the occasion I guess of being a competitor of yours before that. And I certainly had a great deal of respect for what MAP was doing in particularly how well the joint venture had come together in its first two years or so of existence. It was really at that first meeting that I saw what a world-class team looks like. A team that was cohesive, united, focused around being Best in Class. You were already there, but you weren't satisfied with that. You were intent on doing much better than that. But it was a great team. A great set of assets. Great leaders. People like Corky Frank, later John Surma and now Gary Heminger taking this company to an even a higher level. You truly have achieved Best in Class performance and obviously that's the reason that Marathon is prepared to go forward with roughly a $3 billion transaction. We have a great deal of faith in you. We have a great deal of faith in the future in the value that you are creating. So, I want you to know that this truly is a new day for all of us, for Ashland, for Marathon, for MAP. And what you have to focus on and what we need to focus on together is how we shape and create that future in the best interest of all of us. And that is what we intend to do in the months ahead. But I do want to point that both Jim and Gary said this transaction is a long ways from being completed and we will operate as a joint venture well until the end of this year. So, we ask that you stay focused, take advantage of the opportunities in front of you, don't let the competition take advantage of diverting our focus and let's make 2004 an extraordinary successful year and position ourselves for the future.

(Applause)
